STANTON'S DEATH THE RESULT OF SUICIDE.

(From the Hartford Times.) Once or twice in his contributions to periodical literature, within late years, Jeremiah Black has hinted mysteriously that the death of Edwin M.
Stanton, the War Secretary, was not wholly attributable to the natural course of disease. This idea, however, was put forward in a dim, uncertain kind of manner, which made it seem more like a suggestion than an assertion. Black never declared boldly that Stanton came to an unnatural end by suicide, but he wove into his writing here and there a black thread which was suggestive of remorse, disappointment and a bitter end. What Black intimated so darkly others whispered, but in no definite way. There are men about the Nation, who, in conversation among themselves, talk frankly of Stanton's death and the horrible circumstances attending it.
These men say that upon the very eve of the tragedy, Stanton made a question of his existence only a question of hours. At this time the circumstances were known to very few, and the number of those who knew them was not much increased since. Outside of the Congressional Librarian, and a few well-trained, trustworthy servants of the Capitol, who guard secrets as they would their lives, and outside of two or three members of the Stanton family, the story of the suicide given below is probably not known to a dozen people in the country.

Stanton resided in a large house convenient to the Departments. It was one of his customs to shave at home, and the duty was performed by a colored barber, who came regularly from the city. Stanton's private apartments stood an improvised shaving chair, and to this the trusty valet would go at the appointed time to perform his duty. Stanton, it is said, was suffering from a severe cold, and he was feeling gradually in health for a week, and had become so despondent as to almost excite fears of an aberration of the mind. Some idea of the state of mind of Stanton has been in the minds of the President and Congress, when the appointment was so suddenly made, and so promptly confirmed by an almost unanimous vote, of the Senate.

On the evening of the 23d of December the colored valet called to shave Stanton. They were left alone in the private apartment, and the barber had partially finished his task, and laying down the razor on a little table beside Stanton, stepped across the room for some water.

A movement startled him, and he turned back in time to see the glittering steel flash by the bare throat, leaving a streak in its wake. The barber caught the razor, and the man who had been made before another stroke could be made. He called for help, and in a few moments there were at the bedside the Surgeon General, a few trusty attendants of the Government, and one or two members of the family. The work had been done, however, and the life current reached. At three o'clock next morning he was dead. How few of the members of the cabinet kept their eyes who read this may know. Very quietly and expeditiously the arrangements for his funeral were made. There was no lying in state, and few look upon the funeral of the deceased. The next day after the decease all that was mortal of Edwin M. Stanton was put to rest, and with the clay was buried his own and the secrets of war.

COUNTING VOTES.—Until the last election, the vote in Philadelphia was always counted by the Board of Ward Return Judges, on pretty much the same system as that which prevails here. The counting of the votes was there no doubt that great frauds were perpetrated—the estimated vote published by the newspapers setting the judges as an indication of how many votes required to be changed.

Under the new law, which went into operation last winter, the votes are counted in open court, in the presence of the Judges of Common Pleas. The result has been most gratifying. The count is a quick one, and this correct counting has enabled the people of Philadelphia to get rid of the worst fraud of the whole which has so long ruled and robbed that city. The effects of our system of counting have been obvious enough at previous elections; but they will be more apparent at the next election, when something like a hundred officers are to be chosen. We trust the disadvantages thus shown may lead to a change in the present method of counting the votes. There is no reason why votes should not be counted as fast as they are polled, and under such precautions as to render cheating or fraud all but impossible.

S. F. Post.

THE REASONS.—On the 30th of October, under the heading of "Ten reasons for voting the Democratic and Independent Republican Ticket," the New York Sun gave the following:

1. Because it is a Republican declaration and opposed to the Democratic and Independent Republican platform, opposed to monopolies and centralization of power at Washington.

2. Because it is a people's ticket, opposed to Grantism and the third-term idea.

3. Because the platform of principles is truly republican as well as democratic.

4. Because it opposes the corrupt Federal Rings.

5. Because it advocates "equal and exact justice to all men."

6. Because it demands "official accountability, enforced by better civil and criminal remedies."

7. Because it advocates "a free press and no gag laws."

8. Because it will win by about 20-000 majority.

EXPENSIVE GAITERS.—The other day after a meeting of a certain famous women's club in which several of the members were comparing their garters, to see which were the handsomest; for garters of extraordinary expense have lately come into fashion, and several of these club members wear theirs clasped with gold and precious stones. The jewellers are all introducing new designs for garter clasps that promise shortly to cost as much as bracelets. The fashion has discarded. A charming woman and singer in society is said to wear a pair of garters that cost $500.

Dying for our Country.

In times of war we hear much said about the duty and glory of dying for our country. Orators who are careful to keep their precious selves out of the bloody fray, will harangue an audience when night sets in, the stomach takes its due share, and to eat heartily at supper and then go to bed is giving all the other portions and functions of the body repose, while the stomach has thrown upon it four or five hours more of additional work after having already labored four or five hours to dispose of breakfast, and a still longer time for dinner. This ten or twelve hours of almost incessant work has nearly exhausted its power; it cannot promptly digest another full meal, but labors at it for long hours together, like an exhausted galley-slave on a newly-imposed task.

The result is that by the unnatural length of time which the food is kept in the stomach, and the imperfect manner in which the exhausted organ manages it, it becomes more or less acid; this generates wind, this dis-tends the stomach, the stomach, the confined the more yielding lungs, confining them to a largely diminished space; hence every breath taken is insufficient for the wants of the system, the blood becomes poor, blue, and thick, refuses to flow, and the man dies, or in delirium or fright leaps from a window, or commits suicide.

Let any reader who follows an inac-cuse for the most part, try the experiment for a week, eating absolutely nothing after a one or two o'clock dinner, and see if a sounder sleep and a vigorous breakfast and a hearty dinner are not the pleasurable results, to say nothing of the happy deliverance from that disagreeable fullness, weight, oppression, or acidity which attend over-eating.

The great renovating and vivifying which a long, delicious, and connecting sleep imparts, both to mind and body, will of themselves more than compensate for the certainly short and rather dubious pleasure of eating a supper with no special relish.

—Science of Health.

WORTH KNOWING.—Every little while we read in the papers of some one who has struck a ruinous blow at his own health, and some other por- tion of his person, and that lockjaw has resulted therefrom, of which the patient dies. If every person in the world was aware of a secret remedy for all such wounds, and would apply it, then such reports must cease. But, although we can give the remedy, we cannot enforce the application. Some will not employ it because they think it too simple; others have no faith in it when they read it, while others often think such a wound of small ac- count and not worth fussing over, and let it alone to do its worst. Yet all such wounds can be healed without the fatal consequences which follow them. The remedy is simple, almost always at hand, and costs but a few cents, and what is better, it is in- fallible. It is simply to smoke such wound, or any wound or bruise that is inflamed, with burning wool or cotton cloth. Twenty minutes in the smoke of wool will take the pain out of the worst wound, and repeated once or twice it will allay the worst case of inflammation arising from a wound of any kind. People may sneer at this "old woman's remedy" as much as they please, but when they are afflicted, just let them try it.

He found her son and informed her of the fact. She was glad to be of being printed in letters of gold and put in every home.—Bing-hampton Democrat.

TRANSPLANTING TREES.—Autumn transplanting trees have the advantage of those planted in the spring, in that the better setting of earth about the roots, so that they are ready for an early start. But there are two cases dig the worse off than spring-set trees. The wind often whips them about and makes a hole around the stem, greatly to their injury. In such cases dig the earth away from them with a spade down to the roots, and replace good mellow earth (not hard lumps) about them, pressing it well about the roots. The loss of life by the tornado will not be less than 60 and fully as many are wounded.

Loss of Stock.—The sudden and unexpected rise in the price of the head of stock, but the losers themselves are not yet able to determine their losses. We understand that the Wilcoxian, near the Shreveport, Bond about 2,400 head of sheep, and were informed yesterday that his herdsmen Franken, a few miles north of this city, on the east side of the river, lost 200 or 300 head of sheep. Brighton & Gaul (who have the widow Hays ranch), John Forbes, P. C. Statler, and others have many head of sheep in fine condition for slaughtering. The loss appears quite general all along the Feather River to the southward, where cut, fifteen or twenty miles above cut. The Feather River was never known before to make such a rapid rise, it coming up on Tuesday at the rate of a foot an hour.—Marysville Appeal, November 28.

THE SUEZ'S MISTAKE.—Velpaen, the French surgeon, had successfully performed, on a little child, the opera- tion, a most perilous operation. The mother came to him and said: "Monsieur, my son is saved, and I thank you very much. I am, therefore, really do not know how to express my gratitude. Allow me, therefore, to bring you to you this pocket-book em- broided by my own hands."

"Oh madame," replied Velpaen, "my art is not merely a question of feeling. Dress, even, which is a luxury to you, is necessary for me. Allow me, therefore, to refuse your charming little present in exchange for a more substantial remuneration."

"But, monsieur, what remuneration do you desire? Fix the fee yourself!"
"Five thousand francs, madame."

The lady very quietly opened the pocket-book, which contained ten thousand francs in notes, counted out five, and after politely handing them over to Velpaen, retired. Imagine his feelings!

GEN. JAMES SHIELDS, formerly in the U.S. Senate from Illinois—1840 to 1856—and later from Minnesota for the short term—1857 to 1860—is now a member of the Missouri House of Rep- resentatives.

Out in the Storm.

Mother, the night is cold and drear, November's storms are truly here;
The winds are whistling round the eaves,
'Tis now the season of falling leaves.

Mother, hark! a voice I hear, Out in the night, so cold and drear;
While we sit by our fire, so pleasant and warm, A wanderer, mother, is out in the storm.

Out in the storm, without any home,
The poor wandering wretch seems destined to roam; Clothes all tattered and worn threadbare, In dull November's chilling air.

We've room for our group, and room for more; Room for the wanderer that waits by the door;
A hungry beggar, a cold, trembling form, Waits by the door, out in the storm.

A mother's hands once soothed his brow,
But she is far from him now; Perhaps the ocean's billows were Rolls between him and his mother's grave.

Perhaps a father, both kind and true, Waits for the wanderer o'er the ocean blue;
Brothers and sisters are waiting in vain,
For a brother that sailed over the foam-frenzied main.

How friendly, mother, friendly and poor; We'll then for the wanderer, open the door.
The gloomy clouds drive steadily by,
Beneath a dark and starless sky.

Let us a shelter for the wanderer find Away from the piercing November wind; Cold and hungry and friendless is he,
Oh! 'Tis a life the beggar's must be.

'Tis sweet to know, there's prepared a home Where weary wanderers need not roam; Sheltered from rain and from the snow, Free from each cruel storm that may blow.

In that better land—on that evergreen shore,
In a mansion that's built to stand forever;
Where never is known a sigh nor a fear, Where never shall be seen one lingering tear.

LINNEE JACOBS.

The Better Language.

Many and many a year ago,
When we old folks were young,
In giving language to our thoughts We used our mother tongue.
But now the age has grown so fast
The old words are forgot, And nothing will suffice us now But slang that is red hot.
In speaking of a man of sense,
"His judgment's good," they said; But now they say, "The old sardine Has got a level head."
Once angry words would lead to blows;
But now, when a "gallout"
"Gives too much chin," or "puts on frills," We "paste him in the snout."
In sorrow then they speak of death,
With pale and trembling lip;
But now, "He's handed in his checks," Or, "The duffer slipped his grip." Then, as they grasped a friendly hand, They said, "How do you do?"
But now, "What have you got that's fresh?" Or, "Well, old chap, what's new?"
Then, "He plays billiards well," we said,
Of one excelled by few;
But now, "Well, he is not a slouch; He shoves a healthy cue."
Once on a time a man danced well—Alas! 'tis no more,
"He's just the boy can shake himself When you boost him on the floor."
A man once used to go to lunch, When eating time drew near;
And now, "he'll wrestle with his hash," Or, "tackle his big bear."
Old friends, at meeting, used to pledge Each other in a cup;
But now, "It is 'here's to yer bill!"
And "George, just hang that up."
Oh, give me back those good old days, When both but true, old-fashioned words,
And slang was never slung.

A French Conspiracy.

It is all very well for the princess d'Austerlitz to spend her leisure in political conspiracy, for her husband is a great dignitary under the late reign, and cannot be expected to look with the eye of favor upon a regime which counts him for nothing. The princess is rich too, and powerful. Few people dare to snub her, and to arrest either herself or her husband, as is done with dangerous persons who bawl "Vive l'Empereur" in the streets, would be out of the question. Besides, her husband approves of her conspiring, and that is enough. But the case is altogether different with Mme. de Sabretache, whose husband, poor Colonel Sabretache, has no taste for plotting against established governments under pretence of buying charges. This M. Sabretache loved the emperor, of course—he was paid, and promoted to do so; but he likes McMan too, and has accepted the command of a regiment from him with a friendly shake of the hand and an exhortation to be faithful. The shake of the hand from the marshal was in particular very gratifying to Colonel Sabretache, and at heart he cannot really see that France is so much the worse for the exit of the Bonapartes. His cigars taste as good as they did formerly, his abstinence has not deterred him, and as to the scarcity of balls and parties, of which Madame de Sabretache so pitifully complains, the colonel is ready to swear that Madame does not spend six evenings at home throughout the winter season, and that her dressmaker's bills have by no means kept step with the alleged diminution of trade-profits. So it ruffles the feelings of this man of duty to find his wife driving about Paris all day with subscription-lists in her hands, returning home laden for dinner with piles of money or satin veils in her brougham, and dashing away again before dessert is fairly on the table. This, however, is too much to be borne, and with a flaming face, Colonel Sabretache turns back, clambers up his staircase, and intercepts his wife, just as she is sallying forth, bravely attired, gloved and bonneted.
"Where are you going, my dear?" he asks, with the air of a man who is determined to show all the moral courage there is in him for once in a way.
"Oh, don't stop me, please," answers the lady with a busy gesture; "it is to-day we are going to see the charger we've bought; such a beauty you never saw—all white, with a pink nose."
"I don't see the use of this pink-nosed charger," answers the colonel with reckless emphasis, as he takes up his position on the hearth-rug.
"Not see the use of him? Why, he's meant to ride on, and I'll have a purple velvet saddle-cloth!" exclaims Mme. de Sabretache, her blue eyes circling with astonishment. "He's the horse that Napoleon IV. will mount when he comes back to save this nation!"
"But, my dear," responds the colonel, stamping his foot to make him feel himself more valiant, "do you think France depends for her safety on a boy of eighteen?"
"Boy of eighteen!" points Mme. de Sabretache, as if here now were a blasphemy which she had never heard before. "Why, I am surprised at you; he is the rightful master of you and me, and all of us; and he is a most lovable boy, with eyes just like his mother's."
"Yes, his mother is a charming person, and so is he, and they are a charming family," ejaculates the colonel impatiently; "but, it comes to this—I don't want to be cashiered as a conspirator. There's a detective down below, and one of these days you may find half a dozen of them up-stairs. Pay your subscription for this horse, if you like, but as to your going to see him, I—in fact, I won't have it."

These are courageous words, and an agitating silence follows their delivery. Then Mme. de Sabretache throws herself on the sofa, in tears, most natural under the circumstances and, very bitter, is heard sobbing.
"I know what it is, you want to break my heart; but I'll go into a convent and never be seen again. I cannot live to face the day when all the little boys will point their fingers at me in the street, and say, 'That's the man who was unfaithful to his emperor!'" The colonel cast a mild expulsive in the direction of the coal-scuttle, and stalks out. A few minutes later, Madame, having dried her eyes, speeds away, not towards the convent, but to see the pink-nosed charger, as if nothing had happened.
The colonel, however, though repulsed with indignation, as a man must needs be who meddles in matters too high for him—the colonel strides off to Tortoni's, and there meets his friend, Colonel Pomponette, sallying about in a livery, and looking as melancholy as himself. Pomponette and Sabretache are both in the same predicament; that is, Pomponette has been smitten, too, hip-and-thigh, in trying to stare that pink-nosed gifted horse in the mouth; and the two, comparing notes, look as dejected a pair of troopers as any to be seen in Paris. So dejected, in truth, that young Colonel de Cassecreau, coming in to breakfast, and happening to catch sight of them, laughs, accuses them, and enquires pleasantly, "What's up?" There is no reason why these two colonels should conceal anything from Cassecreau. He is a man of the world, very companionable, and though he did rise so fast to his colonelcy through drawing-room influence, he is just the man to give valuable advice as to how ladies should be managed. So Sabretache and Pomponette pour out their dismal souls to him, omitting naught, nor setting aside down in malice, but sighing frequently in the pauses of their narration, as if all their words were as many grinder-teeth being drawn. Cassecreau laughs anew and says:
"Do you really want to prevent those ladies from ever falling in politics again? If you do, I'll furnish you with an invalid's certificate."
Both the colonels declare they would pay francs unnumbered for the specific; and hereat suggests a breakfast up-stairs to arrange everything in secret and carefully. The breakfast takes place, and a full cheery one it is. The waiter, flashing in and out with the dishes, can overhear the words, "Vincennes," "imprisonment," "terror," "tears," etc., and the three colonels grew merrier and merrier over these unwhimsical substantives. Nothing can exceed the hilarity of their feast, and they separate by-and-by on the steps of Tortoni's. Cassecreau saying, "Leave it all to me," and the other two replying, "Au revoir, a minute!"
That night, toward twelve o'clock, Mme. de Sabretache, coming home from Mme. de Austerlitz's, is in good spirits and a forgiving mood, for she has just had her husband's humble, not to say penitential, during dinner, offering no further objection to the pink-nosed horse, and leaving her quite free, as usual, to spend her evening where she pleased. If he were at home she would generously pardon his unmanly outburst on the morning, and she is just coming over indulgent things she will say to him on her return, when she is startled by an ugly knock at the door. A most pernicious knock it is, sharp and short, a thing calculated at midnight to make one's blood stop. All the servants are gone to bed, except the madame's maid, so it is this timid young person who goes to open the door on the flat, and as soon as she has turned the key, utters a panic-stricken shriek. At the same time four besuited men stepping through the vestibule, pass into Madame's room, and the foremost of them says, lifting his hat:
"Madame, we arrest you in the name of the law."
"Arrest me?" gasps Mme. de Sabretache, her tongue cleaving to her palate in very horror.
"Arrest you for conspiring the overthrow of the government—that is, for treason," continued the bearded man firmly. "You will please to come with us at once, for we have orders to convey you to Vincennes."
To attempt to describe the ghastliness of that scene, would be a vain work. If fainting would be of any use, Madame would swoon at once; if screaming would avail, she would throw open the window and awaken the neighborhood; but the four bearded men would not so much as let her change her dress. So she must wrap herself up warm and come off to the cab down-stairs without a moment's loss of time: those are the orders, and Madame obeys the orders in a state of collapse which would rend the hearts of any four real detectives who had to convey so pretty a woman to a fortress. Happily these are not real detectives, but disguised officers, friends of that ingenious Colonel Cassecreau, and right off they play their parts when the cab has landed Madame de Sabretache at a small house near the Vincennes fort, and when she is conducted up-stairs to be interrogated by three other officers in full uniform and spectacles. These officers do not conceal from her that it is M. de Broglie's fixed purpose to send her to the Island of St. Marguerite in punishment for her seditious doings; but they admit that she may yet be freed if her husband will call for her being of good behavior for the rest of her days. Here might be a triumphant opportunity for poor Colonel Sabretache to decline going half for any such thing until tears and supplications had softened his heart; but he was equal to the occasion at once, and chivalrously consented. He pretends to have hastened post speed after his wife as soon as he heard of her arrest; and it is a pathetic spectacle enough when the honest fellow puts a pen to paper and signs a declaration that his wife shall never more disloyal him. The officers, however, stipulate for something more than this. They feel bound to warn Madame that if she divulges aught of this matter the government will arrest her again, but the rumor of their ill-timed leniency should act as a perilsome incentive to other rebels.

But there is no fear of Madame's betraying the secret, nor will Mme. de Pomponette, whose night has been made hideous by a similar adventure, betray it. We add with some concern that since this gloomy affair the cause of "Little Indore" has lost two most energetic supporters.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Great Express Robbery.

The Toronto Globe of Saturday gives the following description of the daring train robbery near that city on Friday evening:
The evening train leaving Hamilton at about 6 o'clock, arrived at Port Credit on time, and everything was then in the usual order. Shortly after leaving Port Credit, however, a man entered the rear door of the baggage and express car, and simultaneously four other men came in the other door, all disguised, and looking like desperadoes. They were dressed in the most elaborate of their dresses, with holes in the upper part, to allow of their seeing their way for the carrying on of their operations. The man at the rear door kept guard, so that no escape, however dangerous, might have been effected in that way. The other four advanced in the opposite direction, and two of them seized the baggage man, named Montgomery, and first gagged him with a sort of wax previously prepared, and then bound him with ropes. The other two desperadoes, covering the greater part of their dresses, with holes in the upper part, to allow of their seeing their way for the carrying on of their operations. H-EAT—The demand has been active for milling purposes. Transactions during the week have been brisk, having aggregated 250,000 bushels, at prices in the range of $1 25¢/b, 15¢, the latter being best white for milling purposes.

R-OYAL—Quotations are $9d/cwt for club. The receipts for the week total 41,800 sacks. The total receipts for the first date to date have been 4,781,000 sacks, of which some 118 vessels were loaded in the same period. In the Kingdom, carrying 1,000 centals wheat and 600 centals barley.

S-ORBERG. The demand seems to be greater than for lesser grades, which is reflected in our quotations.

T-OUR. Prices remain unchanged, though there has been no active business during the week. We quote the following:

Golden Gate, Golden Age and Silver Star are all jobbing at 85¢ per cwt.

U-BL. Superfine, No. 3 City, 80¢; No. 4, 75¢. Country brands of extra grade flour at $4.50.

LAW—Demand for shipment E.C. has been unusually strong, and prices are firm for the choicest, bright Brewster. The range of prices, though wide as given as follows: Brewing choice, $1 10; extra light, $1 20 @ 1 75; common, $1 20 @ 1 30. Sales at $1 15 @ 1 20 sacks within the range of quality. Since July last, our exports have been very small.

MIDDLINGS—The market here is held East by rail is much weaker. The amount of stock here is about 600 tons.

SUPPLIES—With a dull market and free recel-ling, supplies have weakened. Sales for the week have been quite light; Surprise are held in large quantities. Coast are quoted at $1 00 @ 1 10, ordinary at $1 00 @ 1 10.

Y.—The price has been advanced to 70¢ for the best, with a brisk demand.

LAW—Is quoted at 65¢ @ 75¢ per bale.

MIDDLINGS—The mill price is $1 00 for bran, and $28 50 ¢ ton for middlings.

SUPPLIES—Supplies are light, and in view of the late rainfall, there is some probability of shortage. We quote sales of yellow at 45¢ cental.

—Is grain demand; receipts are light. The market has been made at $1 10/15. WHEAT—The price has declined. V. S. No. 2 is 54c. RYE—The price is 58c. There is no demand to speak of. BARLEY—The price is 58c. There is no demand to speak of. MAIZE—The price is 58c. The greater portion of the crop was purchased early in the season. The market in New York is in firm. PEAS—Present receipts are small. Owing to the export trade at low prices early in the season, stocks are much reduced and prices are advanced. BEANS—The price is 58c. The market is in firm. WAX—The supply is light, and with a large demand, the price is advanced. The market is in firm. WAX—The supply is light, and with a large demand, the price is advanced. The market is in firm.

TOES.—The crop is reported as having been a good one, and with a prospective demand, and with a good price. Receipts have been quite light for the past few days. The firm with an upward trend. We now quote: Choice, @100; unimbeds, @1 3/8; @1 1/2; Petaluma and other, @1 1/4.

WENS.—The market is nearly here by the time we write, and we quote: Choice, which now commands $1 1/2 @ $1 50.

WHEAT.—The market continues very dull. The receipts have been made within the week, the whole fall clip has been marketed. The stock on hand aggregate about 100,000 bushels, of which $300,000 has been graded, at current rates.
